1. In early October 1950, the Chinese Communist government received orders from Moscow to consolidate the South China coastal defenses, with particular attention to the Swatow-Amoy sector. The Chinese Communists sent military engineers, along with Soviet advisors, on a coastal inspection tour which resulted in the following decisions:
 - a. To strengthen coastal defenses and build more fortifications.
 - b. To destroy and rebuild fortifications not meeting standard specifications.
 - c. To assign regular troops to the areas of Haifeng (115-20, 22-58), Huilai (116-18, 23-03), and Swatow.*
 - d. To send naval ships to the Wanshan Islands for more intensive patrols.
2. On 17 October, KU Ta-ts'un (古大存), deputy governor of Kwangtung, announced that a South China Sea Coast Administration, with branch offices along the coast, was to be established for the purpose of strengthening defenses.
3. On 14 October LI T'ao (李濟)* arrived in Canton under orders from the defense section of the Chinese Communist Revolutionary Military Council.
4. On 15 October the following officials visited defense works at Humon (113-41, 22-49) and T'ai-p'ingch'ang (113-27, 23-26):

LI Tso-p'eng (李作鵬), chief-of-staff of the Kwangtung Military District.

LI Huai-chang (李懷章), chief-of-staff of the Pearl River Defense command.

WANG Tso-yao (王作堯), deputy chief of the Pearl River Defense command.
